No I.D.) videoPlatelet hyperactivity in essential hypertension: role of lipid environment and alpha 1-blockers. Hyperactivity of platelets has been recently demonstrated in hypertensive patients. Platelet function may be altered by lipids present in plasma membrane and by drugs used to treat essential hypertension. We investigated the effects of prolonged (72 hours) treatment with clonidine and terazosin on platelet hyperactivity in untreated essential hypertensive patients. Basal platelet function was assessed in a whole blood aggregometer and platelet aggregation was performed in response to adenosine diphosphate (ADP) and epinephrine. ADP-induced platelet aggregation, thromboxane A(2) (TXA(2)) formation and serotonin (5-hydroxytryptamine, 5-HT) release were significantly higher in essential hypertensive patients than in normal subjects. Treatment with clonidine or terazosin for three weeks improved platelet function in essential hypertensive patients. The improvement observed in platelet aggregation and TXA(2) formation was higher with clonidine than with terazosin. Plasma levels of triglycerides and cholesterol were significantly lower in patients than in normal subjects. Thus, an alteration of the plasma lipid composition might be implicated in platelet hyperactivity in essential hypertensive patients. The improvement of platelet function induced by alpha 1-blockers may be related to the effect of alpha 1-blockers on the lipid environment of the platelet membrane.Lincoln Day Parade The Lincoln Day Parade is a parade and celebration held annually on the 4th Monday of February in Omaha, Nebraska, United States. The parade is held on the day of President Lincoln's birthday, February 12. It is the city's largest parade. Parade The parade starts at noon from City Hall, where it heads east on 15th Street and turns south on Douglas Street.
